

MCKINLEY IN THE FIELD.

The Wonderful Campaign of the Champion of Protection.

HIS VICTORY SEEMS ASSURED.

Working Day and Night--Even on the One Day at Home He Buies Himself Answering Correspondence. Pen Pictures of the Meetings to Which Farmers Sometimes Go With Road Engines as the Motive Power. The McKinley Song.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Sept. 8.—There are eighty-two counties in the State of Ohio, and it is considered a good campaign for any man if he succeeds in visiting one-half of them. Mr. McKinley has already made speeches in twenty-seven counties, and has averaged a speech and a half per day. On Tuesday, a week ago, in Delaware county, he made five speeches within ten hours. He has still forty-eight working days before him, and by the time Nov. 3 rolls around he will have visited every county in the State.

A constitution of iron and a will of steel enable him to plan and to execute that which involves personal exertions that would startle the ordinary public man. He knows neither day nor night; he knows neither anxiety nor worry, but like the modern silent, self-contained steam engine, he realizes his full strength, and develops within himself resources to meet every emergency.

"To-morrow, gentlemen, he is liable to say, 'we will rise at 7.' We have a country meeting twelve miles distant, and carriages will await us at 8. We will return at 4. At 8 in the evening we have a meeting here in the hall. At midnight we will reach Columbus; and I find that one train for the next appointment will depart from Columbus at 5 a. m." Such are a sample of his orders.

ONE DAY IN THE WEEK AT HOME.
One day in every seven belongs to Mrs. McKinley. She suffers him to make engagements for the other six, and she claims the one as her own. High up in the hotel in which they live at Canton he has a little office room. Piled from floor to ceiling are books and records, and scattered here and everywhere are samples of glass and tin and ironware contributed by manufacturers, who proudly send him the first fruits of their new factories. Mrs. McKinley always awaits him here. She is satisfied to be near and see him. She reads and looks. He sits and writes. The high stack of unsigned letters gradually melts, but between the signing of each one is a word, a jest or a simile for Mrs. McKinley. The door of this little sky-loft office, No. 24, stands always open. The word no sooner passes that McKinley is in town than the procession up the stairway begins to move. But McKinley writes on. One by one they drop in, and he has a word for everyone. As rapidly as they come in they drop out satisfied. But McKinley never ceases to write. There is no rest for him, and will be none until November.

Fortunately the Ohio leader understands the art of resting. He can twist himself up in the seat of a day car, close his eyes for twenty minutes and wake up refreshed. He can draw about him the folds of his familiar gray Inverness cloak, and throwing himself back in the carriage cushions sleep while the wheels rattle over rough country roads. Just now he is the picture of perfect health. The usually pale face has a little flush of red, his stride is long and firm and he moves with the air of a well-fed man. And, blessings piled on blessings, what an appetite he has! Stimulants? Never. Smoking is his one weakness. Pressed to the limit of physical endurance, he is liable to forget himself and smoke all day, but this year Mrs. McKinley has him well in hand. She has forbid excessive smoking and that settles it.

THAT FARMER VOTE.
An odd impression still prevails that somehow or other the Ohio farmers are going wrong and are preparing to jump the political traces. Now, as a matter of fact, there are only sixty thousand voters all told in the open and secret branches of the Alliance of Ohio, and they are bound by no moral obligation or understanding to vote the alleged People's ticket this fall. They say that they do not intend to, and certainly the size of the frequent country meetings and the unparalleled enthusiasm of the farmers who farm bears witness to this testimony. There is nothing like these monster country meetings under the leaves in the open air. On one recent occasion the correspondents got together and planned to take a count of all the conveyances at the place of meeting. The sum total was 1,150, and this included vehicles of all sorts and sizes from a two-wheeled jump cart with capacity for two to a traction engine and consort.

It is a curious sight to see our country cousins going to meeting behind a traction engine. The thrashing season is now at its height, and it is a very easy matter for honest Farmer Jones to decorate his "steam portable" with muslin colors, hitch on a wagon or two behind, gather up a hundred or so of neighbors and go steaming along the highway even twenty miles or more with flags flying, bell ringing and whistle screeching. These farmers have a well-understood system of their own in getting up their meetings, and it requires no apologies. Exits and entrances are provided at the groves, special constables are on hand to keep order, and a speaking space of three or four acres is inclosed with rope or wire. Trunks of trees radiate from the grand stand like the sticks of a fan, and across them are laid planks, which answer well enough for seats. The village band and the glee clubs furnish music, and the fires of enthusiasm once lighted sink only with the sun. It is infectious and intoxicating, and it takes a man of India rubber to withstand it.

THE MCKINLEY SONG.
The effete Opera may sing and whistle its comic opera ditties if it please, but from Lake Erie to the river all Ohio is now singing a good song which runs like this:
Our iron horse is whistling
For Jerusalem, the grand,
Our harvesters are threshing wheat
Way down in Egypt land,
The wide world is our market,
Our factories are booming,
And they cry at every hand
That Uncle Sam is doing business
At the same old stand.
Chorus:
Then come along, come along,
Bailly for the fray,
McKinley and protection
Are bound to win the day.
Our factories are booming,
There is plenty in the land;
Uncle Sam is doing business
At the same old stand.
It is the McKinley hymn of protection, and the Buckeye State has learned it, and it takes only the glee club with a brass band to start the gay and jerky tune to set great choruses of, anywhere from five to ten thousand people abouting:

Uncle Sam is doing business
At the same old stand.
Even a Mugwump editor, on hearing these lines properly rendered, would feel compelled, by some power outside of himself, to rise and join in the refrain.

And then McKinley—slowly and deliberately he begins to speak. His eyes look far away, miles and miles away, and the voice is low, but ever distinct. Heads are leaned forward to catch the first words, and the terrified in the rear may dare to shout to him, "Speak up louder." And he does speak up louder. He begins to warm up, the eyes begin to snap and sparkle, the mighty muscles about the jaws become rigid, and the voice—the wonderful voice that has not its like—rings out loud and clear, and among all the people there is a silence, a silence that is a more fitting tribute than applause. He pours out facts upon facts and he piles them mountain high. He has no oratorical tricks, he depends upon facts and the power of earnestness. The writer has heard Mr. McKinley speak upward of one hundred times, but is unable to recollect his ever indulging in any anecdote or description positively humorous in character, except this one:

"Why, my friends, I have an old friend over in another county—a good old Democrat—and they tell this story of him: He went into the grocery store the other day and asked for a dollar's worth of sugar. The merchant opened his barrel and began to measure it out. Scoop upon scoop he piled in the scales while the old fellow looked on in astonishment.

"'I only want a dollar's worth,' he burst out with finally. (Right here the audience cheers and thinks the point has come.)

"Well, sir," replied the grocer, 'it's only a dollar's worth that I'm giving you. Sugar has come down. Don't you know that this here new tariff law has made sugar cheaper?'

"The countryman scratched his head awhile, then put his back to his shoulder and started out. He passed on the threshold and then returned.

"Take some of this darned stuff out!" he said. 'I don't want to take so much alone. If I should take all that sugar home and tell my wife that I'd bought it for just one dollar she'd make me vote the Republican ticket?'" (And the audience invariably howls with delight.)

THE PLACE TO LIVE.
One of the most delightful meetings of the season was down near Chillicothe, in the glorious valley of the Scioto, where the girls grow up prettier, the horses faster, and the corn taller than anywhere else in Ohio. There was a short stop at Chillicothe City, the ancient capital of the State, and the party trod on sacred soil. Mount Logan, whose picture is stamped in the great seal of the State, frowns in the distance and east its shadow upon the cemetery where rest the bones of Governors Tiffin, McArthur, Worthington and "Rise Up William" Allen. But what have we to do with the moldy and historic past? On to South Salem we go, past the little academy where Gov. Foraker got his first schooling, and up to the country castle of the felly Laird of Burnie Brae. Thomas McDougall is the name of the generous host, and his career indicates what protection can do, and what it does do. Thirty years ago he was a penniless mechanic in Scotland. He had pluck and ambition, and he saved up until he had enough to pay his way to the land of Hail Columbia. Here he worked night and day, toiling and saving and with increased wages he amassed the amount needed to pay his way through school and college. In course of time, to ent a good story short, he was admitted to the bar, and has now a practice worth $30,000 a year. He has his homelike country seat at Burnie Brae, and there he farms, and like William M. Evans could say to his guests, if he would, "Take either milk or champagne—they cost me the same."

Mr. McDougall gave a great picnic for Mr. McKinley, and 12,000 people came. The stalled ox was killed and there were feasting and merry-making galore. The modern knights came on horseback and instead of spears carried superb stalks of corn. There was a solid day of speaking, for they grow orators down there as naturally and almost as thickly as buckeye trees, and "the best American of them all" was there in the fullness of his strength.

VICTORY IS CERTAIN.
"Tis a royal passage, the passage of a man through the midst of the people that McKinley is making day by day, and the Recorder's correspondent, seeing and appreciating all, feels his pen too feeble to bring out in clear relief the spirit of the times.

McKinley's election is conceded. It is only a question of thousands, more or less. The Legislature is in danger. The political leaders of the West and the unholly Democratic party of Ohio have declared it their purpose to defeat John Sherman. To defeat John Sherman this year means a fearful danger to the Republican party. Grave national interests are at stake, for back of the canvass for governor and for United States senator the Democrats of Ohio have an infamous bill which they dare not pass this year for fear of its repeal by a succeeding Legislature. The bill is now in the hands of a committee, and it provides for the selection of presidential electors by Congressional districts instead of by the State at large. Should the next Legislature prove Democratic and that bill be made a law, the State of Ohio would, by virtue of the existing gerrymandered districts, return fifteen Democratic electors and six Republican electors, and against this scandalous gerrymander nothing but a political tidal wave beyond the bonds of reason could prevail.

The Republicans of the country have therefore a deep interest in the elections this fall. It is to Ohio that the best talent should be sent, and be sent to stay. The legislative districts are close, and the People's party is working only for its candidates for legislative office. Under ordinary circumstances the danger might not be considered great, but with possibilities so serious the Republicans of the country should leave no stone unturned, to the end that Ohio's verdict in favor of honest money and the principle of protection be registered with no uncertain sound.

BAVARIA'S GREETING

To the Emperor of Germany—He Receives an Ovation at Munich.

MUNICH, Sept. 8.—The Emperor of Germany, upon his arrival here last night from the scene of the Austrian army manoeuvres, was received with the utmost enthusiasm and respect. As the imperial train approached this city tens of thousands of voices greeted it with cheers. Emperor William, apparently satisfied with the warmth of his reception, quickly alighted from the train as it drew up along side the carpeted platform and warmly embraced and kissed Prince Luitpold, the regent of Bavaria, who, accompanied by a number of his suite, including the ministers of state, was in waiting to receive the imperial traveler. As the Emperor was on the point of leaving the station he was met by the Burgomaster of Munich and other municipal officers. The Burgomaster, after a short speech of welcome, presented him with an illuminated address expressing the satisfaction of the citizens of Munich at the visit of the ruler of Germany to the Bavarian capital.

The Emperor thanked the municipal authorities for their welcoming address, and referring to the peace of Europe, the Emperor William said that he would be grateful to his high allies if he was supported in his efforts to preserve peace. The streets leading up to the castle were arched and festooned with flowers hung with flags and banners and mostly brilliantly illuminated. Every window along the route was filled with enthusiastic Bavarians who heartily and loudly cheered the young Kaiser.

About the royal castle a great crowd was gathered. The cheering continued long after the Emperor, Prince Luitpold and their suites had disappeared within the castle gates, and from one end of Munich to the other could be heard the explosions of countless rockets and other fire works.

Drowned While Bonting.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Sept. 8.—Arthur Hunt and his two sisters were rowing on the Mohawk river yesterday afternoon. When near Freeman's bridge, a mile east of here, the boat was by some means capsized and Hunt and one sister were drowned. The other sister clung to the boat and a man swam out and rescued her.

Pronounced Hopeless, Yet Saved.
From a letter written by Mrs. Ada E. Hurd, of Groton, S. D., we quote: "Was taken with a bad cold which settled on my lungs, cough set in and finally terminated in Consumption. Four doctors gave me up, saying I could live but a short time. I gave myself up to my Savior, determined if I could not stay with my friends on earth, I would meet my absent ones above. My husband was advised to get Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. I gave it a trial, took in all eight bottles; it has cured me, and thank God I am now a well, and hearty woman." Trial bottles free at Logan Drug Co.'s Drug Store; regular size, 60 cents and $1.
